Expressions used in arguments what has something (got) to do with...? used for asking, often in an angry way, how two people or things are connected or why someone is interested in something firstly (adverb)

used for beginning a list of reasons, arguments etc full stop (adverb) used for emphasizing that there cannot be any argument about a subject ha/hah (interjection) used for showing that you disagree of course (adverb) used ironically for disagreeing with someone puh-leeze (interjection) a way of writing 'please' that shows how it sounds in informal conversation when saying that you think someone has said something stupid right (interjection) used for saying that you disagree completely with a statement or do not intend to accept a suggestion uh-uh (interjection) used for writing the sound that people make when they disagree with something, or when they say 'no' to a question absolutely not used for showing that you disagree strongly with what someone has just said are you kidding? used for saying that you do not believe or agree with what someone is saying don’t make me laugh used for telling someone that you disagree with them or think that what they said is not true drop dead used as an angry reply to someone who has said something that you do not like for a start used for introducing the first point in a series, especially in an argument for starters

used for introducing the first point in a series, especially in an argument

for your information used for telling someone angrily that they are wrong about something

I’ll show you used for talking about what you intend to do as an angry reaction to what someone has said or done

I’m sorry but used for politely disagreeing with someone’s opinion I beg your pardon used ironically for showing that you disagree very strongly with what someone has just said you makes me (want to) puke used for saying that someone makes you very angry keep your shirt on used for telling someone who is beginning to get angry not to get annoyed kiss my arse an insulting way of saying that you do not agree with someone or respect someone no hard feelings used for telling someone that you are not angry with them after an argument or disagreement nothing of the kind/sort used for saying politely but firmly that you disagree with someone of course not used for disagreeing with someone over my dead body used for telling someone angrily that you will never allow something to happen pardon me used for politely disagreeing with what someone has said wait/just a minute used when you are about to disagree with what someone has said speak for yourself used for telling someone that your opinion about something is different from theirs stuff it used for telling someone that you are very angry with them that’s it used when a series of situations has made you angry, so that you decide to leave or to stop what you are doing

(the) same to you used as an angry reply to an insult or rude comment to start with used for introducing the first or the most important point to support an argument or opinion up yours used for insulting someone when they have upset you or made you angry wait a minute/second used for saying that you disagree with what someone is saying or doing, or that you want them to listen to you